LUNCH & REFLECT

mit Salim Mbusa

The Politics of Peace: Who defines it? Who measures It? who Funds it? And who gets recognised?

Liebe Mitglieder der Plattform ZKB,

Wir laden Euch herzlich zum nächsten Termin der Lunch & Reflect-Veranstaltungsreihe mit Salim Mbusa ein (Hinweis: Dieser Termin wird auf Englisch stattfinden).

Peace is often presented as a universal concept, but who gets to define what peace means, how it should be achieved and how is its success being measured? Whose knowledge and experiences shape international peacebuilding frameworks and whose perspectives are often overlooked? Drawing on perspectives from the Global Majority and experiences in international civil society work, we will critically reflect on the power dynamics behind our understanding and practice of peace. We will question the standards by which peace is measured, the recognition of traditional and community-based approaches to justice and conflict resolution, and the influence of funding structures and international institutions on peacebuilding priorities. Through a decolonial lens, we will explore whose voices, knowledge and contributions are recognised, and what this means for how we understand and practise peace today.

Salim Mbusa is from Uganda and currently lives in Germany, where he has been involved in peace and international youth work for several years. He studied law in Uganda and is currently studying social and cultural sciences. He works with the non-profit co-operative Act for Transformation, where he coordinates international peace projects and the volunteer programme.
